Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Ohio University Bulletin, Vol. 16: May 1920 Poem read at the Aldine Club, New York, before alumni and friends of the Ohio University, Saturday night, January 3, 1920: Daughter of Earth and Heaven, Mnemosyne, Fair mother of the tuneful Muses Nine, Who still to men art known as Memory, Bring us a cool and sparkling draught divine From bubbling fount of thy Pierian Spring I That we of Athens classic shades may sing. Fill high each glass but not with rosy wine, For Bacchus is an outcast, banished now; No longer leaves of ivy and of vine, And clustered grapes now crown his ample brow; By fount or grove no longer is he seen And so, instead of wine, bring Hippocrene. Lo! as we quaff the old O. U. appears Seated upon a gently rising hill; Crowned with the memories of centuried years, But fair and ever growing, youthful still! Once more I see you as in Eighty-Four, When first I crossed the threshold of your door. Thy campus and its immemorial elms That morn were witchery of light and shade; First seat of learning in Northwestern realms, How far from you tonight we all have strayed, Who now are gathered here in Aldine Hall The memories bright of past years to recall. Would we now know you were we now to see The old O. U. midst changes years have wrought? What matters it? For still Mnemosyne Limns but the pictures fair that once she caught; The hills around thee rise as then they rose, And round their base the bright Hockhocking flows. Time ever onward sweeps on viewless way And life s Processionals...
